Hotspots and bans on loitering

The police have designated a number of areas with a particularly high risk of large gatherings, so-called hotspots. You should avoid those areas.

The police have intensified its surveillance of parks and other recreational areas in which large groups of people have gathered recently in order to reduce the risk of spread of the coronavirus. The police will increase its presence at hotspots and will issue bans on loitering if necessary if too many people gather at the same place.

The following list of current hotspots is dynamic and may change. New locations can be added, and locations may be removed as agreed with municipal or other authorities, and the police can introduce a temporary ban on loitering if too many people continue to gather.
